Excerpt from The Pearl Fishery of Venezuela

The difficulties in obtaining Indian divers gradually increased. Some of the tribes, like those of Margarita Island, determined and skillful enough in defending them selves with weapons, successfully resisted capture and eventually were left alone. Others moved to the interior and consequently the local supply of available slave labor was 61% hansted. Gradually the Indian divers were replaced by Negroes. Royal Decree of June 25, 1558 definitely prohibited the use of Indians in pearl fishing and prescribed that only Negroes be used for this purpose.
