This historic book may have numerous typos, missing text or index. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. 1901. Not illustrated. Excerpt: ... HARMONY. It will be conceded by all students in metaphysics of the present age, that the spiritual ego is one with Omnipotent force, and when attuned to harmonious vibrations with the Infinite, possesses all the power over its own physical environment and its surroundings that has been attributed by the theologian to God. Allowing this to be a correct statement of truth, the chief end of man is to consciously possess the power to bring himself into these harmonious vibrations. This done, he has solved the problem of living. The purpose, the aim, of the student in advanced philosophy to-day, therefore, is not to learn a new philosophy, but to make practical the one he knows to be true. Students are everywhere discussing theories of vibrations and the laws which govern them--in short, they are experimenting. Are they experimenting on right lines? Vibrations pass through atmosphere, and can only reach the intelligence of him whose atmosphere will permit. The wires are already laid. You may connect your house and office with a wire and not be able to speak across it; you must have at each end a properly adjusted transmitter and receiver, that you may give and receive messages across the line. Primarily, we start with the assumption that all life is one, that all intelligence is bound together by subtle unseen chords on which thought can travel, and on which thought does travel, whether we will or not. It is not my purpose here to offer any argument to prove the truth of this philosophy, which is so old and so new. Laotze, who wrote of Tao, the Chinese God, twenty-five hundred years ago, recognized it, and declared that though Tao could not be denned, he could be appropriated. All great thinkers, even before Laotze, and since then, have agreed as to the oneness of li...
