The Essene Gospel of Peace known also as The Essene Gospel of John was discovered in Aramaic in the Library of the Vatican and in Ancient Slavonic in the Library of the Hapsburgs in Vienna (now the Austrian Government's State Library) by Edmond Bordeaux Szekely, who compared, edited and translated both manuscripts. It was published in English in England and the United States in 1937 and since translated into German, French, Spanish and 15 other languages. This edition is the 14th in the United States, where more than 112,000 copies were sold in previous editions. This ancient Aramaic manuscript reveals Jesus' teachings concerning the natural healing forces of sun, air, water and live foods, and throws light on the values and terminology of early Christianity and those of the Essene brotherhoods and communities of the first and second centuries before Christ.
