The existence of God is perhaps the most debated and most important question throughout the entirety of human history. From ancient times until the present, philosophers, scientists, mathematicians, theologians, and other intellectuals across a wide range of disciplines and backgrounds have contemplated the issue of whether or not there is a God. In this work, Daniel Ventress, a history graduate with an MA in Cultural History from the University of Chichester and a strong interest in philosophy, theology, and science, goes through the major arguments in favour of the existence of God, arguments against the existence of God, and the various objections and delivers his own personal conclusion based on his research.
