Grayish-Black: poetry from the ribs. Devyn Springer

This small but wonderful collection contains poetry, prose, and photography. Throughout the book, the reader receives little hand-written journal entries and sketches taken directly from the author's own personal journal. Touching on everything from race to mental illness, death and love, you will dive into the author's mind as he asks "are poets writers, artists, or both?" This politically charged yet reserved collection of raw writing and art is sure to thrill.

"Grayish Black" is poetry from the ribs. A collection of poems, affirmations, and journal entries which dive into a wonderfully sad world. For those who feel everything, and for those who feel nothing. For those who feel like they have been existing a little bit too much lately.
